Scaling community social innovation to promote inclusion in the implementation of the SDGs: An international, interdisciplinary and intersectoral perspective on women and girls with disabilities

Ms Ana Maria Sánchez Rodriguez is a CAROLINE fellow working in partnership with Maynooth University and Humanity and Inclusion, an international non-governmental organization. Her research focusses on scaling up social community-based innovations for persons with disabilities, particularly women. Her research question for this study is: How can the gap between community-level good practices and national-level policies be bridged in order to scale up the most effective and inclusive initiatives for achieving the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) for persons with disabilities?
